Military plane crashes

Officials decline to say whether there are injuries.

BY THE STAFF OF THE NEWS

CLOVIS — A military plane crashed south of the Clovis Municipal Airport about 6:45 p.m. Tuesday, officials said, but it was not immediately clear if anyone had been injured or killed.

Cannon Air Force Base officials said three Cannon personnel were on board the U-28A aircraft, performing a training exercise.

Capt. Brandon Baccam of Cannon said “the base at Cannon” had not been provided the status of the airmen. He said that information would not be released until next of kin had been notified. He anticipated that would happen sometime Tuesday evening.

The U-28A “provides a manned fixed wing, on-call/surge capability for improved Tactical Airborne intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance in support of Special Operations Forces,” according to the Air Force website.

Baccam said the accident was reported at 6:54 p.m. A small fire related to the crash was extinguished at 7:39 p.m., he said.

Clovis City Manager Larry Fry said the accident occurred outside airport property “across 21st Street in the middle of a field.” The airport was not closed and flights were on schedule, Fry said.

City and Curry County authorities said Cannon Air Force Base officials had secured the scene and were asking all information come from Cannon’s public affairs department.

Updates will be posted on our website — www.easternnewmexiconews.com — as information becomes available.

Departments report in at luncheon

Legislature’s intent of particular interest.

By Jim Lee
STAFF WRITER
jlee@thenews.email

CLOVIS — The Clovis Civic Center hosted a gathering of city and county officials for the quarterly gathering of department leaders. Of particular interest was the intent of the New Mexico Legislature concerning the City of Clovis and Curry County. Each department mentioned what it has done, what it wants to do, and related reductions in funding from the state.

The following are highlights by entity from the quarterly luncheon:

■ Cannon Air Force Base: Lt. Colonel Diane Sullivan reported on a $1.3 billion base construction program. Some of the projects are housing renovation, construction of 609 new homes by May, a new dining facility for airmen, a new youth center that opened last year, and renovation of the Portales gate in November. After her talk, it was announced Sullivan was selected for promotion to colonel.

■ Clovis Community College: President Becky Rowley said the semester has been tied to the recent legislative session. She also announced the reaccreditation of the nursing program, easier transfer of students between colleges and universities, and minimal effect (for now) of tuition hikes. All higher education will be cut by at least one percent. Dr. Rowley predicted that CCC will have to respond to cuts in financial support, and this will likely affect personnel. She concluded by mentioning the Popovich Animal Theater on March 23.

■ Clovis Schools: Superintendent Jody Balch reported the district will have to cope with a $500,000 monthly cut for about six months, requiring the district to dip into its cash reserves to make payroll. This will also mean increased class sizes, while secondary teachers remain difficult to find. Public school personnel adjustments will have to be made. Parkview School will be built May through August and will be open for the next school year. The district has received the go-ahead to demolish Highland Elementary and build a new school on the site.

■ Curry County: County Manager Lance Pyle introduced new clerk Annie Hogland. He further announced that the southside handicap entrance will now be the only entrance to the courthouse.

A new detention center, Pyle said, is in the design development phase and will have 48 to 96 beds, a new medical facility, and a new sally port. He added that the assessor’s office is beginning its property valuation process.

■ Clovis MainStreet: Lisa Pellegrino-Spear and Natalie Daggett talked about the impact of legislative bills on downtown Clovis, and mentioned 29 private building improvements. They also brought up eight private building purchases, $24,600 in private sector grants, 962 volunteer hours from the community, and the start of phase two of the Lyceum Theater renovation.

■ Clovis/Curry County chamber of Commerce: Chamber President David Robinson reported on behalf of the chamber. The Committee of Fifty conducted bus tours to introduce new CAFB people to the community. The chamber wants to work on membership retention instead of recruitment alone. The recruiting goal for March is 12 new members. The chamber is planning Pioneer Day, observing the 10-year anniversary of Special Ops at CAFB, and is planning the Draggin’ Main

Senate overrides sick day bill veto

If House follows suit, it will be first override in administration.

THE SANTA FE NEW MEXICAN

SANTA FE — The New Mexico Senate on Tuesday afternoon overrode Gov. Susana Martinez’s veto of a bill that would enable teachers to use more sick days without being penalized in their performance evaluation.

Martinez’s veto remains in place unless the House of Representatives also votes to override it.

The override vote in the Senate was 34-7, well above the two-thirds majority needed. All seven votes against the over-

Spring Trout Derby coming up soon

Event to be held March 25 at Oasis State Park.

BY THE STAFF OF THE NEWS

Local anglers of all stripes will have the chance to win big while helping a local entity at an upcoming fishing event.

The eighth annual Spring Trout Derby, held March 25 at Oasis State Park, brings fishermen of all ages and backgrounds from across the region, according to Park Manager Jim Whary.

“We get them from Curry County, Roosevelt County, we even get some from some of the counties in western Texas. They can come as far as up from Roswell and from Fort Sumner,” he said.

The average trout derby brings around 170 participants to Oasis, Whary said, adding that entry fees go toward the Friends of Oasis group, which consists of volunteers who help the park’s full-time staff.

“The money collected by the Friends group helps fund Oasis. It’s a small group of people that has an interest in this park, and any money that they collect stays here at Oasis. It does not go into the general fund. It’s for incidentals and stuff like that,” he said.

Participants will fish from 9 a.m.-3:30 p.m. (registration will begin at 7:30 a.m. at the park’s office) and will attempt to catch tagged trout. 40 trout with color-coated tags — which will include $10, $25, $50 and $100 tags — will be distributed throughout the lake, and participants must leave the tag in the fish to receive any prize money, according to Whary.

With the end of winter trout season and the improvement of weather, the event provides families with an early opportunity to spend time together outdoors, Whary said.

“It just brings families out together, because this is open to all ages. It’s time to get the family outdoors again. It’s important for families to spend time together, outdoors or indoors,” he said.

Registration fees for the derby are $5 per person, with a park entry fee of $5 per vehicle for non-annual permit holders. Entrants over the age of 12 must have a valid New Mexico fishing license.

Trials delayed in felony cases

BY THE STAFF OF THE NEWS

CLOVIS — A pair of felony cases, one a vehicular homicide charge, had trials delayed during morning hearings presided over by District Judge Drew Tatum.

Flor Garcia, 22, of Clovis, was scheduled to go to trial March 21 in connection to a July 11, 2016, crash at the intersection of U.S. 60/84 and NM 467. Brandon Summers, 21, died at the scene of the accident.

Garcia was charged six weeks later with vehicular homicide.

A continuance was filed by the state, as a witness list had not been filed.

Defense attorney Dan Lindsay objected to the continuance. Outside of the courtroom, he argued if the prosecution doesn't identify witnesses in time for defense to do its own pretrial interviews, the state should be required to go forward without those witnesses.

Another setting wasn't immediately identified.

Also in Tatum's court, a woman accused of criminal sexual contact of a minor had her case moved to a May docket.

Mary Pryor, 61, of Clovis, is accused of punching an 11-year-old in the face and genitals and threatening further harm if he said anything.

Assistant District Attorney Kristen Beltran said the state would need a continuance, as a victim in the case had recently moved more than 400 miles away. Beltran was covering for Chief Deputy District Attorney Brian Stover, who was in a trial.

Lindsay, representing Pryor, said he had been in contact with Stover and the two were working on plans to interview the witness.

Tatum said the case would likely be moved to a May docket.

Override

ride were by Republicans, including Senate Minority Leader Stuart Ingle of Portales. Sen. Pat Woods, R-Broadview, voted with the majority.

Sen. Craig Brandt, R-Rio Rancho, led the override initiative against a Republican governor. It would be the first override during the Martinez administration.

"It was extremely difficult. I don't know that I've ever felt this kind of pressure," Brandt said afterward.

He said several people asked him not to proceed with the override attempt. He would not identify them.

Brandt also said he faces retribution from Martinez.

"I doubt that I'll have many bills signed by this governor in the next two years," he said.

The New Mexican has asked Martinez's administration for comment and will add it as soon as possible.

Brandt said he pushed the override as a matter of fairness.

"This was about making sure our teachers are not penalized for being sick," he said.

Brandt also said he met four times with members of the state Public Education Department on the Martinez administration's policy on teacher absences, including once meeting with Education Secretary Hanna Skandera. Those sessions were unproductive in getting a compromise, he said.

The measure Martinez vetoed was House Bill 241, which would have amended the evaluation system in which teachers can use three or fewer sick days in an academic year without being downgraded on their job evaluation. The bill would have allowed a teacher to take up to 10 sick days with no penalty.

The House of Representatives initially approved the bill 64-3, and the Senate voted for it 39-0. All three eastern New Mexico representatives — Randy Crowder, Dennis Roch and Bob Wooley — voted yes, and Roch is one of five sponsors for the legislation.

Democrats control the House 38-32, but Republicans in that chamber typically have been loyal to her. That means the odds of an override in the House appear long.

Brandt said he hoped the overwhelming override vote in the Senate would prompt House members to do the same.

"We've completed half the journey," he said.

■ City of Clovis: City Manager Larry Fry announced new businesses in the north side of town, including Denny's Restaurant and the new Petsmart. He reported that the master drainage program is almost done, and road reconstruction is planned for Martin Luther King Jr Boulevard and Thornton Street. An anchor monument honoring the navy will be installed at Veterans Park by Memorial Day.

During his opening welcome Mayor David Lansford brought up the Mayor's Ball of March 25. Proceeds will benefit the local Humane Society and the Main Street Program.

On this date ...

1992: A survey conducted by Clovis Community College found that 86 percent of city residents considered Clovis a "good" or "excellent" place to live.

Nearly 1,000 people responded to the survey.

The survey also revealed 72 percent of city residents purchased groceries in Clovis, while 44 percent purchased clothing in town.

Sixty-five percent of those responding to the survey said they use Clovis medical services.

1977: An American Civil Liberties Union spokesman urged Congress to repeal federal criminal penalties for marijuana use.

"Marijuana has been called by many the younger generation's martini," Miller said.

"Frankly, from what I know of both drugs, I would prefer that my children would smoke grass rather than drink martinis, a far more lethal drug."

NM legislation working to block the sunshine

It's ironic that the state Legislature is considering several anti-open government bills during Sunshine Week. That's the national initiative spearheaded by the American Society of News Editors to educate about the importance of open government and the dangers of excessive and unnecessary secrecy.

Interestingly, the Florida Society of Newspaper Editors launched Sunshine Sunday in 2002 in response to efforts by some Florida legislators to create scores of new exemptions to that state's public records law.

The following year, the idea of a national Sunshine Sunday was raised at an American Society of News Editors Freedom of Information summit. But it was decided the initiative needed to be more than a single day, and Sunshine Week was born.

During Sunshine Week 2017 hundreds of media organizations, civic groups, libraries, nonprofits, schools and other participants engage in public discussions on the importance of open government as a bedrock of democracy. What better place to start than with our own Legislature?

The state Inspection of Public Records Act emphasizes "that all persons are entitled to the greatest possible information regarding the affairs of government and the official acts of public officers and employees."

Yet several bills seeking to limit your right to "the greatest possible information" about your government are under legislative consideration and deserve your attention.

Senate Bill 149: Although its stated purpose is to protect the privacy of victims and witnesses of six highly personal crimes, this bill is so broadly written it would render public versions of certain police reports "virtually void of meaningful information," according to Greg Williams, president of the New Mexico Foundation for Open Government.

It would allow law enforcement to keep secret anything in police reports that could reveal the identity of victims or non-law enforcement witnesses to multiple crimes until charges are filed.

Sponsors say the intent is to protect victims, but who knows how broadly agencies will interpret it, possibly taking out all locations, descriptions, etc.

This well-intentioned but poorly executed bill is sponsored by Sen. Jacob Candelaria, D-Albuquerque, and supported by the University of New Mexico, which is under an agreement with the U.S. Department of Justice because of its handling of sex-assault reports.

As Williams points out, it "would significantly harm the ability ... to report on violent crime in New Mexico, which in turn keeps the public less informed on issues of law enforcement and crime in our communities."

House Bill 505: This bill, sponsored by Rep. Antonio "Moe" Maestas, would allow some convicted criminals to have their criminal records erased.

Supporters say a criminal record can keep someone from getting a job and that it isn't fair for one mistake to follow a person for the rest of their life. Opponents correctly point out it's bad policy to expunge public records, especially when it comes to the work of law enforcement.

There are numerous reasons people should have access to criminal records, ranging from hiring decisions to deciding who you want teaching or driving your children. The threat of a lifelong criminal record is also a deterrent to crime.

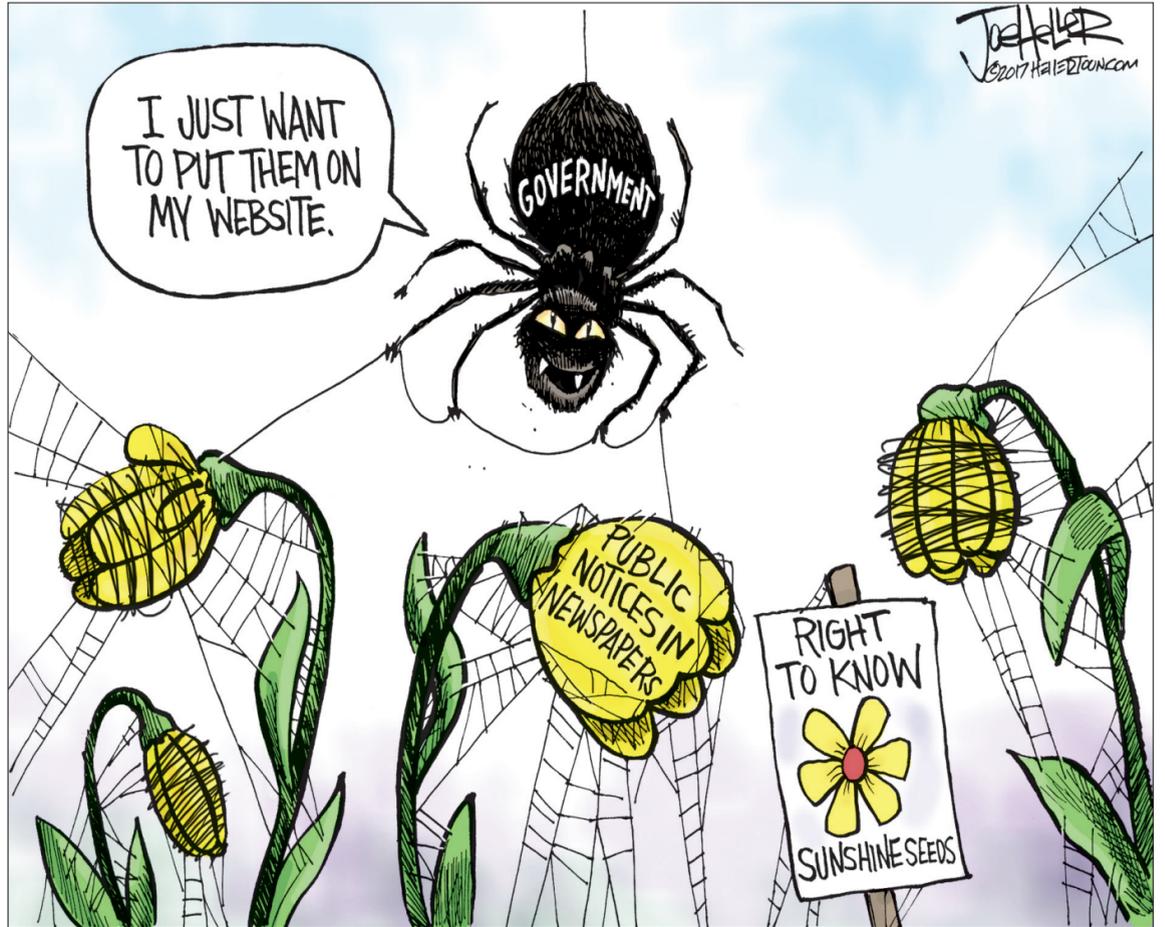

Other bills that could make government less transparent include:

■ Senate Bill 93, which would keep names of applicants for public jobs a secret.

■ Senate Bill 429, which would make a wide range of Spaceport America records secret;

■ House Bill 267, which would exempt from public disclosure "data, records or information of a proprietary nature" generated by university research before the information is published or patented.

"This is, unfortunately, normal," NMFOG's Williams said recently. "Basically, every session we deal with several attempts to roll back public access to public records."

Government web of socialist programs

Frequently, people see a problem and demand government step in to solve it, without noticing government is the cause of the problem in the first place.

Adding more government to a problem is like trying to fight a fire by piling dry wood on it.

Public school is one of the most stubborn cases of mistaking a problem for a solution. Even among otherwise sensible people, as soon as you bring up public schools, reason flies out the window, and is instantly replaced with emotion.

Extraterrestrial visitors might be excused for believing they are witnessing devotion to a religion instead of a government program.

Supporters of government schools confuse schooling for education, have been fooled

Kent McManigal
Local columnist

into believing government schooling is "free," and undervalue education to the point they believe that unless they are forced to fund and attend these compulsory indoctrination camps, people — especially "the underprivileged" — would go uneducated.

Those who believe in government schooling fret over test scores, budgets, teacher salaries, transgender restrooms and showers, bullying, and other problems that have one very simple, ethical solution: the abolition of government schools.

Then, let people choose their own path, paid for with the money they'll save through elimination of the taxes.

If the only way you can have what is important to you is to finance it through the government theft scheme called taxation, then your idea is obviously not as wonderful as you imagine.

If something is valued, people will find a way to get it. If they are decent people, they'll find a way to get it without resorting to theft or coercion.

Simultaneously eliminate welfare and you don't even have to worry about an uneducated generation expecting to live on other tax-funded programs. For those who simply can't learn, or refuse to try, let them rely on charity — which is both ethical and better at weeding out the undeserving.

This web of interdependent socialist programs is like a giant domino chain. Once the dominoes begin to fall, a free society becomes more within reach with each piece that topples. Those who love socialism will do everything in their power to prevent such a turn of events; using every excuse they can dream up.

I don't mind. A free society won't happen until liberty matters to enough people. Until that day arrives, I'm willing to keep speaking out, even when it upsets those who cling to the status quo. How about you?

Wire tapping info came from media

On Feb. 19, the New York Times published a story that began, "American law enforcement and intelligence agencies are examining intercepted communications and financial transactions as part of a broad investigation into possible links between Russian officials and associates of President-elect Donald J. Trump."

The story goes on to state that, "The FBI is leading the investigations, aided by the National Security Agency, the CIA, and the Treasury Department's financial crimes unit." And: "One official said intelligence reports based on some of the wiretapped communications had been provided to the White House."

On Jan. 20, the Times featured the front-page headline, "Wiretapped Data Used in Inquiry of Trump Aides."

Although he is a novice politician, Trump does have some experience in the business world and is familiar with organizational charts. A review of these org charts for the federal government indicates that the director of the FBI, the National Security Agency, the CIA and the secretary of the Treasury are appointed by and report to the president of the United States.

Rube Render
Local columnist

Novice politician Trump then tweeted, "Terrible! Just found out that Obama had my 'wires tapped' in Trump Tower just before the victory. Nothing found. This is McCarthyism!"

High-ranking officials of the former Obama administration denied any wrongdoing. These officials included the deputy national security advisor for strategic communications and aspiring novelist Ben Rhodes.

Rhodes' credibility is somewhat suspect as he openly bragged about lying to reporters to sell the Obama administration's Iran deal in a May 2016 article in "The Federalist."

Rhodes' primary qualification for his position may have been that his brother David is the president of CBS News.

We do know that his administration spied on reporters during Obama's time in office, notably James Rosen from Fox News. Rosen clarified the wiretapping charge with, "I have to clarify that I was not wiretapped, my parents were not wiretapped, which is where you place a listening device on someone's telephone line and you listen to their conversations. What happened to me was that the attorney general, Eric Holder, under Barack Obama as president secretly designated me a criminal co-conspirator and a flight risk and thereby had a federal judge give the government permission to rifle through all my emails."

News reports indicate this is what happened to Trump.

As to the gaggle of reporters and Republican senators demanding to know where Trump got his wiretapping information from, the president should reply, "I got my information from the same place President Obama got his information from for eight years. I heard about it on the news."

Migrants prepare families for worst

By David Montero
LOS ANGELES TIMES

SALT LAKE CITY — She saw the news of the raids happening around the country and felt helpless. Scared. She had lived here for more than a decade, following her father's advice: Work hard and stay out of trouble.

But suddenly it felt as though trouble was looking for her. Lorena Napola worried about her four children. What if she were hauled away? Who would make sure they got to school? To doctors' appointments? To church?

The questions weighed on her in recent weeks. She saw on the news a mother in Arizona get picked up by federal agents for deportation. Napola thought the woman seemed normal. Unassuming. She was without papers. Like her.

Napola's friends spoke of rumors: dark trucks filled with people in dark uniforms raiding nearby neighborhoods. She knew President Donald Trump campaigned to crack down on illegal immigration and now he appeared to be a man of his word.

So she went to see Andres Paredes, a leader at her local Mormon church. Three of her children are U.S. citizens, she told him. Would he care for them if la migra came and she were deported?

Paredes, a quiet man who came to the United States from Peru decades ago, drew up power of attorney papers that gave him authority to make school, medical and other decisions for her children in case she and her husband were deported. Napola felt relief that her kids would be cared for and sadness that it had come to this.

"They are my life," she said. "They are everything."

As the papers were signed, Paredes said, his heart broke. He has signed power of attorney with two families.

"It's a big responsibility," he said softly. "I'm not sure it's entirely sunk in yet."

The fear among immigrants in the United States illegally has reached such a pitch that some have altered their lifestyles, won't answer the door if someone knocks, and pay close attention to reports of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement actions on social media and the news.

But Larry Love, who leads a Mormon stake in Salt Lake City, said many like Napola are going a step further: finding trusted people to sign power of attorney papers to ensure their U.S.-born children could continue to thrive in the country if they're deported.

Love said that in his church of fewer than 200, more than 20 people have signed power of attorney papers with friends or clergy since Trump was inaugurated. He signed one with Norma Flores, who wanted to do it last year

Los Angeles Times: David Montero

Michael Clara, a community activist, signed power of attorney papers for two families who feared deportation and wanted to ensure their children would be looked after.

because she thought Trump would win and his rhetoric frightened her. He said more have been requested by people in the church.

Flores, who has been in the United States for 13 years, always lived with the threat of deportation, but it wasn't until Trump won in November that the 38-year-old thought deportation could be a real possibility.

After they signed power of attorney papers with Love to care for her 10-year-old son, she and her husband purchased a plot of land in Mexico. Just in case. But she hopes she never lays eyes on it.

She said she would be sad to be separated from her son, who is in the fourth grade and dreams of being a soccer player. But she laughed while sitting in the booth of a small restaurant one recent morning with Love and added that her son also was good at math.

"I want a better education for my son," she said. "I want my son to live in a place that is free and with opportunity."

She is worried more about her other son, who is 14 and came with her and her husband when he was just a year old. Flores fears that if he had to go back to Mexico, he would be bullied because he grew up in America. She also fears being a victim of crime in Mexico because in the small town where she bought land, Flores said, people will assume they have money.

"I am scared," Flores said. "But I trust in God that he has a plan for me, and I will accept that."

Power of attorney paperwork is becoming a part of workshops being put on by civil rights and immigrant rights groups and churches throughout the country in light of Trump's executive order that expanded ICE's criteria for arresting and deporting immigrants in the country illegally.

"The president wanted to take the shackles off individuals in these agencies," White House press secretary Sean Spicer said last month.

Mayra Joachin, a staff attorney with the National Immigration Law Center, said recent high-profile arrests have sparked a push for preparation — including power of attorney paperwork.

She said the arrest of Romulo Avelica-Gonzalez, a 48-year-old father of four, after he dropped off his daughter at a school in Los Angeles was particularly jarring, as was the arrest of Daniela Vargas, 22, in Mississippi after she left a news conference in which she had called for immigration reform.

Avelica-Gonzalez had been in the country 25 years and has four children — all born in the United States.

Joachin said having immigrants with U.S.-born children sign power of attorney papers gained steam in 2010 when Arizona passed an anti-illegal immigration bill that became a template for other state legislatures to pass.

But as the U.S. Supreme Court struck down some of the Arizona law's key provisions, President Barack Obama signed an executive order in 2012 to allow some immigrants in the country illegally to obtain work permits after paying a fee and submitting to background checks.

The practice of signing power of attorney papers began to fade.

Jean Hill, government liaison for the Catholic Diocese of Salt Lake City, said the Trump administration's rhetoric and actions have rekindled the need for it.

"Back then, it wasn't as widespread because it was mostly just Arizona," Hill said. "This is happening at a federal level and people are terrified."

The Pew Hispanic Center estimates that there are more than 4.5 million U.S.-born children with immigrant parents living illegally in the United States.

Joachin said power of attorney doesn't supersede parental rights, but does provide some decision-making authority for the person who signed the paper. She said people should enter such agreements carefully.

"It should be someone they know very well," Joachin said.

She said immigrants and their advocates also have discussed the value of designating legal guardians for children with parents at risk of deportation. But that requires going through the court system and is a more stringent process.

Michael Clara, an immigration rights activist and community organizer in Salt Lake City, was going to sign guardianship for two teenage boys from two different families he'd known for years.

But he said the parents were fearful of going to court and entering their names in the system, so they opted to do power of attorney with him. The papers were signed and notarized in his home.

One of the families, he said, belongs to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but the boy is Catholic. Clara, who is Mormon, said that under the power of attorney and the wishes of the parents, he would honor the child's faith.

Clara said he was inspired by Pope John Paul II and the story of a rabbi who recalled how the pope — in his early days as a priest in Poland during the Nazi invasion — refused to baptize a Jewish child taken into hiding by a Catholic family because he wanted to respect what the parents would've wanted.

Clara sat in his office and wiped his eyes as he choked up at the thought of it. He said he hoped the paperwork would never be needed. But if it happened, he was prepared to take on the authority granted by the power of attorney.

"I'll take him to Mass on Sunday myself," he said.

Fact check: Both sides loose with facts in health debate

By Calvin Woodward and Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Congressional Budget Office report on a Republican health care bill set off an intense reaction in Washington, and some on both sides of the debate are playing loose with the facts.

Republicans are overlooking President Donald Trump's promise to deliver "insurance for everybody," which the CBO makes clear will not happen if the legislation becomes law. Democrats are assailing Republicans for "attacking the messenger," seeming to forget all the times they assailed the budget office themselves.

The Congressional Budget Office is respected for nonpartisan rigor in its estimates of the costs and impacts of legislation. But no projection is infallible, particularly when it comes to large, complex programs. For example, the agency in 2010 overstated the number of people expected to buy insurance under President Barack Obama's health care law, misjudging how many would join because of the threat of tax penalties.

Yet, CBO's neutrality has been valued by both parties — though not always at the same time. It depends whose ox is being gored.

A look at statements in the debate and how they compare with the CBO's estimates and the underlying facts:

TRUMP: "We're going to have insurance for everybody. There was a philosophy in some circles that if you can't pay for it, you don't get it. That's not going to happen with us." — To The Washington Post, Jan. 15.

CBO: It estimates the bill would leave 14 million fewer people insured in the first year, 24 million fewer by 2026.

In the first year, the biggest reason more people are uninsured would be repeal of penalties Barack Obama's law imposes on those deemed able to afford insurance but who don't buy it. Still others would decide to forgo coverage because of higher premiums or do without Medicaid.

In following years the main reason for a drop in the number of insured would be that the Republican bill scales back Medicaid for low-income Americans. Altogether, CBO estimates 52 million people would be uninsured by 2026, a vast distance from "insurance for everybody."

SEAN SPICER, White House press secretary, Tuesday: "Having a card and having coverage that when you walk into a doctor's office has a deductible of $15,000, $20,000 a year isn't coverage. That's a car. That doesn't get you the care you need."

THE FACTS: He's wrong about deductibles under Obama's law.

Out-of-pocket expenses for consumers are limited. Deductibles, copayments, and coinsurance together can't exceed $7,150 this year for an individual plan sold through HealthCare.gov or similar state markets. For a family plan it's $14,300. After that, the insurance plan pays the full cost of covered benefits.

In addition, more than half of customers in these plans get subsidies to help with their out-of-pocket costs.

SEN. SCHUMER, Senate Democratic leader: "CBO is virtually unassailable. Everyone, Democrats and Republicans, whether it be George Bush, Barack Obama or anyone else has gone along with CBO. ...CBO speaks the truth. They've been speaking the truth for decades and to try to attack CBO is simply attacking the messenger." — Comments to reporters Monday.

REP. NANCY PELOSI, House Democratic leader, on Republican reaction to the CBO: "Some of them are trying to pin a rose on this report and make it sound like it's a good thing and the others of them are trying to discredit the CBO, but it's completely wrong, completely wrong. ...

Numbers are quite elegant things, you know. They speak very clearly." — Comments to reporters Monday.

THE FACTS: Democrats have not hesitated to attack this messenger when its conclusions have not suited them.

"The Congressional Budget Office never gives us any credit," President Obama said in 2009 when the CBO pointed to the expense of Democratic health overhaul proposals. Complained Pelosi at the time: "The CBO will always give you the worst-case scenario."

Again in 2014, Pelosi did not consider CBO's numbers "elegant," or correct, when they forecast job losses from a Democratic effort to raise the minimum wage. She accused the CBO of making arguments that "contradict the consensus among hundreds of America's top economists" and said it "ignored new perspectives in the wide array of analysis on the minimum wage."

TRUMP: People covered under the law "can expect to have great health care. It will be in a much simplified form. Much less expensive and much better... lower numbers, much lower deductibles."

CBO: It says cost-sharing payments in the individual market, including deductibles, "would tend to be higher than those anticipated under current law." Cost-sharing subsidies would be repealed in 2020, "significantly increasing out-of-pocket costs for nongroup (private) insurance for many lower-income enrollees."

TRUMP, at a Cabinet meeting Monday: "Obamacare, all of a sudden, the last couple of weeks, is getting a false rep that maybe it's OK. It's not OK, it's a disaster and people understand that it's failed and it's imploding. And if we let it go for another year, it'll totally implode."

CBO: Not in the view of the budget experts. They described the market for individual policies under Obama's health care law as "stable." They said it is likely to remain stable under the proposed GOP replacement legislation, too.

MICK MULVANEY, Trump's budget director:

"If you have coverage that doesn't allow you to go to the doctor, what good is it in the first place? ...Democrats took all of this credit for giving people coverage, but ignored the fact that they had created this large group of people that still could not go to the doctor." — Tuesday on MSNBC's "Morning Joe."

THE FACTS: Republicans gloss over reality when they make this argument. While deductibles are high for the Affordable Care Act's private insurance plans (averaging $3,000 last year for a standard silver plan), the law requires preventive care to be covered at no charge. And more than half of the people enrolled in the health law's insurance markets get an extra subsidy when they go to seek care. It can reduce a deductible from several thousand dollars to a few hundred. The GOP bill would repeal those subsidies.

Other evidence points to tangible benefits from Obama's coverage expansion. For example, government researchers have found fewer Americans struggling to pay medical bills. A 2015 report found that problems with medical bills had declined for the fourth year in a row. Most of the improvement was among low-income people and those with government coverage, and it coincided with the ACA's big coverage expansion.

House passes bill on false reports

SOUTHWEST ROUNDUP

Utility bill stalls in committee

A bill to require publicly owned electric utilities to choose the least costly alternative when considering new energy sources has plenty of support outside the Capitol, but it has barely moved inside the building.

Santa Fe County commissioners on Tuesday unanimously adopted a resolution supporting Senate Bill 360. The Santa Fe City Council did the same last week.

But the bill appears to have stalled. It received an endorsement from the Senate Conservation Committee, chaired by the proposal's sponsor, Sen. Joseph Cervantes, D-Las Cruces. Since then, the bill has been awaiting consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has yet to schedule a hearing.

Lottery fund requirement lifted

Tuesday was a lucky day for the state lottery. The House Appropriations and Finance Committee voted 10-3 to lift a requirement that the lottery turn over 30 percent of its revenue to a scholarship fund for in-state college students.

Critics have argued the proposal would amount to giving the lottery a blank check to fund its own prizes and promotions. But the lottery authority argues it needs flexibility to pay bigger prizes, spend more on marketing, boost sales and ultimately drive even more money into the scholarship fund.

The very same committee on Friday had unanimously voted down a slightly different version of Senate Bill 192. But under the proposal advanced on Tuesday, the lottery would have to turn over at least $38 million a year to the scholarship fund for the next five years. The version voted down last week would only have required $35 million annually.

Committee tables gun bill

A gun-control bill showed a flicker of life Tuesday, one day after a committee in the House of Representatives voted to table it.

The House Judiciary Committee took back up House Bill 548, which would expand background checks for gun purchases, and voted 6-5 to advance it.

But the bill is not likely to go far.

It is expected to head next to the House Consumer and Public Affairs Committee. The chairman, Rep. Eliseo Alcon, D-Milan, also sits on the House Judiciary Committee and had joined Republicans in voting to table the measure on Monday.

Minimum wage proposals move

Two proposals to raise the statewide minimum wage continue to move through the Legislature.

Senate Bill 386, which would raise the hourly minimum to $9 from $7.50 by April 2018 is headed for a vote of the full House of Representatives after the House Judiciary Committee advanced the bill Tuesday on a 5-4 vote. If it passes the House, it goes to Gov. Susana Martinez for her consideration.

Sponsored by Sen. Clemente Sanchez, D-Grants, the legislation would also increase the minimum wage for tipped employees over the next year to $2.63 from $2.13. The measure would allow employers to pay a lower training wage during a worker's first 60 days on the job.

Another proposal, House Bill 442, calls for increasing the hourly minimum to $9.25, and $3.70 for tipped employees, on Jan. 1, 2018.

— Wire reports

By Steve Terrell
THE SANTA FE NEW MEXICAN

Spurred by a Four Corners-area water company that for months provided phony information to state regulators, the state House of Representatives has unanimously approved a bill making it a crime for owners or operators of public water systems to knowingly give false reports to the Environment Department.

House Bill 511, sponsored by House Speaker Brian Egolf, D-Santa Fe, passed on a 66-0 vote Monday night and now goes to the Senate.

There was virtually no discussion about the reason for the bill during a brief floor hearing.

Complaints last year from customers of the Animas Valley Water Co. eventually prompted the state to order thousands of households to boil their water. Some people said the utility's poor water quality made them ill or damaged clothes, washing machines and water heaters.

Environment Department officials, who backed the bill, have said the company supplied false information.

"For numerous months, they submitted false data to the department indicating the water was compliant," the department's Drinking Water Bureau chief, Stephanie Stringer, testified during a legislative committee hearing.

The fiscal impact report on the measure said the Environment Department "periodically receives information which has been knowingly falsified from persons regulated by [the department] in the areas of drinking water and liquid waste. False information submitted to the department can have serious public health consequences, lead to significant costs to innocent individuals and businesses, and compromise regulatory programs."

Under Egolf's bill, it would be a fourth-degree felony to knowingly give false information about water quality, a crime punishable by 18 months to nine years in prison.

The House approved the bill only after accepting an amendment by Rep. Nathan Small, D-Las Cruces, that removed an entire section dealing with those who "negligently" relay false information to the Environment Department. That section included a possible fine of up to $10,000 for unknowingly giving false formation.

House members approved the amendment without objection. Rep. Greg Nibert, R-Roswell, who had voted against the bill in the Judiciary Committee, thanked Small for the amendment. "It was a real concern to me that we would have a negligence standard applied to our volunteers [working in water systems] at a lot of our smaller communities."

The House also adopted an amendment saying that false information covered under the law would have to be related to a public water system. House Republican Leader Nate Gentry, R-Albuquerque, said this was to ensure that a water company employee couldn't be "prosecuted for a felony for lying about his golf score."

The bill is similar to HB 371, sponsored by Rep. Kelly Fajardo, R-Belen, which was stopped in its tracks last month by the House Environment, Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which tabled the measure on a 6-6 vote. In addition to operators of water systems, Farjardo's bill also would have included owners and operators of sewage systems.

Egolf sent HB 511 to the House Judiciary Committee rather than the more conservative committee that stopped Fajardo's measure.

Governor vetoes computer science bill

By Andrew Oxford
THE SANTA FE NEW MEXICAN

Gov. Susana Martinez vetoed two bills Tuesday that passed the Legislature with overwhelming support, including legislation that would have allowed high school students to count computer science classes toward math and science credits needed for graduation.

The second vetoed bill would have made what appeared to be a minor change to state law dealing with tax increment development districts. Such districts are formed by local governments as a means to finance public infrastructure, like streets and utilities, for new development

Martinez did not provide explanation in her veto messages to legislators.

The governor also signed two bills Tuesday.

House Bill 230 allows horse-racing tracks that are combined with casinos, known as "racinos," to change the number of days it hosts races each week.

Martinez also signed House Bill 162, a direct response to concerns about alcoholism in McKinley County and the city of Gallup. The bill gives those local governments the option to cut the hours that stores can sell alcoholic beverages in their jurisdictions.

Backers of the bill to allow high school students to get math and science credit for computer classes said Martinez's veto of Senate Bill 134 is a setback to economic development and efforts to diversify the tech industry's ranks. The backers included a mix of business groups and liberal Democrats.

High schools currently treat computer science as an elective. High school students must typically complete four math courses and three science courses to graduate. Under Senate Bill 134, school districts could have counted a computer science class toward those math and science requirements.

Paige Prescott, president of the Computer Science Teachers Association of New Mexico, told a Senate committee last month the measure would give students an incentive to take computer science classes. In turn, she argued, more New Mexico students would be better equipped with tech skills that are in demand.

"This legislation was intended to help develop the talent pipeline for New Mexico's emerging high-tech industries, as well as to create a 21st century workforce in the state," Jason Espinoza, president and CEO of the Association of Commerce and Industry, said Tuesday.

Backers also argued the measure would make college degrees and professional careers in computer sciences accessible to a broader range of students.

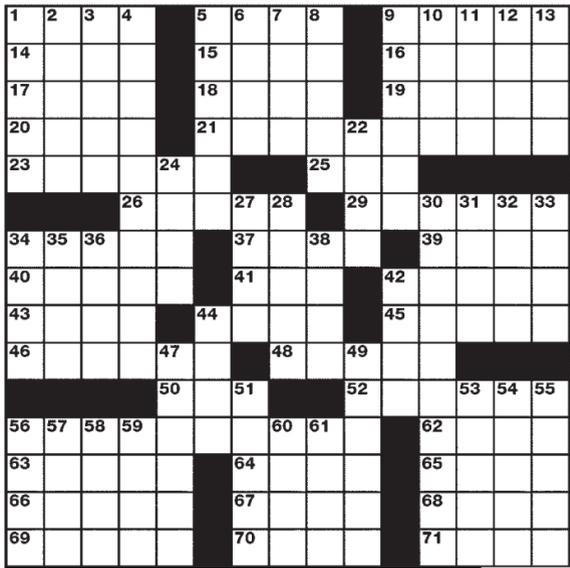

"This program is one of the best things we can do to get girls in a field dominated by men," Rep. Bill McCamley, a Democrat from Mesilla Park and a co-sponsor, told the House shortly after receiving news of the veto.

The bill would not have required school districts to offer computer science courses as credits towards graduation. The state Public Education Department would have had to develop standards for such courses and the credits could only be counted toward graduation for students entering high school. It would not have affected students already in high school.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You'll want to ensure that everyone will be taken care of in the event of your absence later in the day. Assign specific duties!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — It's a good day to put your thinking cap on and ponder things you've tried to avoid of late. A certain situation will not be ignored.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You must make time for the kinds of tasks that require a high level of coordination among friends and allies. Organization is the key.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You may have overbooked your day, trying too hard to please everyone who wants something from you. You must start saying no.

Price to be on DL
FORT MYERS, Fla. — Boston Red Sox left-hander David Price is likely to start the season on the disabled list because of his sore pitching elbow.

Starting the second season of a $217 million, seven-year contract, Price has not yet appeared in an exhibition game.

"I think at this point, yeah, it would be hard to see him ready to go at the start of the season," manager John Farrell said before Tuesday's game against Toronto. "We really won't have any kind of idea until he gets on the mound the first time and right now, I don't know when that's going to be."

Boston had hoped for a formidable rotation headed by Price, Cy Young Award winner Rick Porcello and Chris Sale, acquired in December from the Chicago White Sox.

Seahawks add Lacy
RENTON, Wash. — The Seattle Seahawks are hoping Eddie Lacy can be motivated by a one-year contract to rediscover the form that made him the 2013 Offensive Rookie of the Year.

The Seahawks and Lacy agreed to terms on a one-year deal Tuesday, providing Seattle a big body for a run game that was once the best in football but lagged last season following the retirement of Marshawn Lynch.

Lacy was the top offensive rookie four years ago when he rushed for 1,178 yards and 11 touchdowns. He also ran for more than 1,100 yards in 2014, but has since been slowed by injuries and lost favor with Packers coach Mike McCarthy at times.

Mount St. Mary's wins

By Joe Kay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTON, Ohio — Diminutive point guard Junior Robinson fearlessly dribbled into the heart of New Orleans' defense, pulled up and hit yet another of his oh-so-soft jumpers. This one decided a frenetic opening game for the NCAA Tournament.

The smallest player in Division I scored 23 points Tuesday night, including that go-ahead jumper with 1:27 to play, and Mount St. Mary's held on for a 67-66 victory over New Orleans in the First Four.

Robinson carried the Mountaineers (20-15) to only their second NCAA tournament win, making jumpers with so much arc they appeared to tease the ceiling.

"The way he plays out there — his speed, his athleticism — it's just so special," coach Jamion Christian said. "When you're a smaller guy, you're naturally going to have a chip on your shoulder and you want to go out there and show the world the things you can do."

NCAA MEN'S TOURNAMENT

The Mountaineers will head to Buffalo to play defending national champion and top overall seed Villanova in the East Regional on Thursday. They had a charter flight waiting after the game.

"It's a dream come true," guard Elijah Long said. "But this is March Madness, and this is part of the madness."

Mount St. Mary's led most of the way, but New Orleans (20-12) pulled off a comeback befitting its resurgent season. The Privateers had a chance for a final shot, but Erik Thomas' inbound pass with 2.6 seconds left was off target and stolen by the Mountaineers' Chris Wray.

The Privateers' tournament appearance was part of a huge turnaround for the school, which was severely damaged by Hurricane Katrina in 2005. They went 10-20 last season, but won the Southland's regular season and tournament titles for the first time in school history.

CLOVIS — Clovis High's boys won two of three super-tiebreakers and the Wildcats won Tuesday's dual against Roswell Goddard at the CHS tennis courts, Senior Roland Angadi at No. 1 singles and junior Colby Coiner at No. 4 won the 10-point tiebreakers after splitting sets with their Goddard opponents and the Cats, winning five of six singles matches, claimed a 6-3 victory over the Rockets.

In girls competition, Goddard took two of three in doubles competition and notched a 5-4 win over the Lady Wildcats.

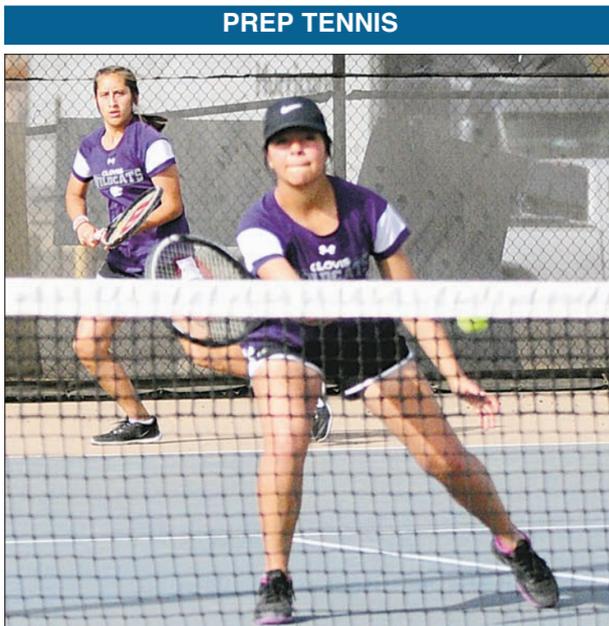

"It was pretty evenly matched," CHS tennis coach Brenna Silveira said. "It was nice to see the boys win. Even when they didn't win, they worked hard for it and (the matches were) close."

Senior J.J. Alvarado won a second-set tiebreaker to finish off the Rockets Chris Brooks 6-7, 7-6 (7-1).

On the girls' side, junior Jadan Anderson rallied from a one-set deficit to beat sophomore Rae Jones 3-6, 7-5, (10-5). Clovis also got singles wins from senior Kylee Brooks at No. 1 and Madison Credle at No. 2, and they teamed up to beat Goddard seniors Breanna Blaylock and Briana Meeks 6-1, 6-3 at No. 2 doubles.

"There are a couple of things we need to go back and work on, but overall I thought we played well," Silveira said of the girls. "Madison played well today, and so did Kylee."

Cats hand Rams 10-0 setback

CLOVIS — The Clovis High baseball team walked away with a with a run-rule win over Portales on Tuesday night, beating the Rams 10-0 in six innings at Bell Park.

While the Wildcats improved to 6-3 for the season, the Rams started the season with a one in the loss column. Clovis built a 3-0 lead through three innings before ending it with a seven-run sixth.

Both teams' coaches conceded that with the Rams playing their first game, just three days removed from a Class 4A state runnerup finish in basketball, things were expected to look a little rusty.

"I think physically we are going to be fine, but mentally we need to clean it up a little bit," Rams coach Dusty Nusser said. "I think we had some good (at-bats), chances to score. We kind of ran ourselves out of an inning or two, but we will be OK."

Wildcats coach Richard Cruce said his team in running smoothly right now, but could use a little more offense.

"We are pitching and playing defense great, but we have to start swinging the bats a little bit better," he said. "When those come around, I think we have a chance to be fairly good."

"The last few weeks, we are learning, getting to do things the right way. That being their first game, it's tough on them because we are that deep in season and we should be able to do things like that."

The pitching was indeed good for the Wildcats, with Connor Langrell throwing six scoreless innings, allowing only five runners on base and one hit.

"Connor came out and threw strikes early, got outs early, struggled a little late walking some people," Cruce said. "But I thought he threw really well today."

Portales struggled in the field with six errors. Emilio Lovato got the start for the Rams, throwing 3 1/3 innings while giving up eight hits and three runs.

Tomas Gallegos was the only player with multiple hits, going 2-for-4 for the Wildcats with a pair of run-scoring singles. Clovis finished with seven hits. Kayden Shober capped the sixth-inning barrage with a two-run, walk-off single.

The Rams and Cats are both slated for three-day tournaments beginning on Thursday, Portales going to Eunice while Clovis plays at Roswell.

“I think physically we are going to be fine, but mentally we need to clean it up a little bit. I think we had some good (at-bats), chances to score. We kind of ran ourselves out of an inning or two, but we will be OK.”

Badgers' stars ready for last hurrah

By Genaro C. Armas

NCAA TOURNAMENT

MADISON, Wis. — Clutch shots. Final Four experience. Press conference hijinks.

Seniors Nigel Hayes and Bronson Koenig have been through just about every conceivable situation at Wisconsin, including two Final Fours and a midseason coaching change.

They've got one last shot to make a run in the NCAA tournament.

"They understand it's one at a time," coach Greg Gard said. "If you don't play well, it will only be one game."

One last hurrah to add to their legacies in Madison. Wisconsin has 11 NCAA tourney wins over the previous three seasons, more than any other team in the country.

Hayes and Koenig have been there for each one, having played important roles since their freshman seasons. As sophomores, they started on a team that featured future NBA players Sam Dekker and Frank Kaminsky. Dekker's play in the 2015 tournament, when the Badgers lost to Duke in the championship game, elevated the forward's stock enough that he was drafted in the first round by the Houston Rockets as a junior.

Now Hayes and Koenig get another chance to get the attention of NBA scouts.

The 6-foot-8 Hayes averaged 13.5 points and 6.5 rebounds this year, returning for his senior season after getting input on his NBA draft stock last year. Some draft boards list Hayes as a potential mid to late second-round pick.

Koenig averaged a team-high 14.1 points but was slowed for a couple weeks late in the year by a calf injury. The team's best clutch shooter and facilitator, Koenig geared up for his senior season when he went through intense workouts with a celebrity trainer in Los Angeles last summer.

"I was trying to be as well-prepared as I can be ... because the way NBA (general managers) and everyone look at us, in college if you don't basically kill your senior year, then you're not going to be drafted," Koenig said in the preseason. "I just took it upon myself to go out there to (Los Angeles) and work as hard as I can."

No one questions their work ethic. The results, though, didn't always match preseason expectations.

The Badgers (25-9) were considered the Big Ten standard-bearer with Hayes and Koenig leading an experienced team, and emerging big man Ethan Happ providing a post presence. Hayes was the league's preseason player of the year.

Wisconsin ended up finishing second in the Big Ten and advanced to the conference tournament final, when they lost to Michigan. Still a good season, though not quite what was expected from a Final Four contender.

And Wisconsin could still be just that, especially since Koenig appears to be fully healed from a calf injury that slowed the Badgers during a late-season rut of five losses in six games. The Badgers open NCAA play on Thursday in Buffalo, New York, as a No. 8 seed against ninth-seeded Virginia Tech.

"They don't let the outside noise or all the drama that comes with it ... they do a very good job of filtering that," Gard said about Hayes and Koenig after the 71-56 loss to Michigan.

Koenig thrives in clutch situations. Brimming with confidence, he has a bit more of a reserved personality — especially when compared with Hayes.

An affinity for press conference stenographers turned Hayes into a viral sensation during the 2015 tournament. A dry wit stands out in postgame sessions with media that are otherwise often dominated by clichés.

As they've matured, Koenig and Hayes have also become more confident taking stands on issues. Koenig, whose mother is Native American, last year traveled to the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota to take part in the protest over the construction of an oil pipeline.

Hayes has spoken out in support of pay for college athletes. This season, Hayes and junior guard Jordan Hill also each took a step back from their teammates during the national anthem as a form of protest.

"Fortunately, I have great teammates. I've done some pretty solid things with them on the basketball court," Hayes said recently when asked about his legacy at Wisconsin, "and also off the court, try to just do what I can to make the world a better place."

Denver Broncos defensive end DeMarcus Ware gives chase to Carolina Panthers quarterback Cam Newton during the 2015 Super Bowl at Santa Clara, Calif., won by Denver 24-10. Ware is retiring from the NFL after spending 12 seasons with the Broncos and the Dallas Cowboys.

Ware calls it quits in NFL

By Arnie Stapleton
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — DeMarcus Ware won't be returning to either the Dallas Cowboys or the Denver Broncos as expected.

The 12-year NFL veteran is instead retiring from the NFL.

Ware announced his decision Monday on Twitter.

Next to a split image of the Cowboys and Broncos, Ware wrote, "After a lot of thought and prayer, I've decided to accept the unknown and retire from my NFL career. Tempting opportunities still present themselves for me to play and I feel better than I have in years. However, long-term health of quality of life outweigh the spark and passion to play that I once had."

Ware's decision is a shocker.

Just two months ago, he scoffed at those suggesting he might have played his last NFL game after he missed the Broncos' season finale to undergo lower back surgery.

Hours before Ware announced his retirement, Broncos general manager John Elway said, "He's going to test the market to see what's out there. I told him that's probably the best thing to do at this point in time and we'll stay in touch and see where he is."

After he announced his retirement, the Broncos tweeted, "See you in Canton."

"DeMarcus, you are the epitome of what an NFL player should be," Elway tweeted. "Congrats on your Hall of Fame career & thank you for becoming a Bronco!"

Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said: "DeMarcus was everything we could have ever wanted in a player, a person and a representative of the Cowboys organization. He was one of the most dominant NFL players at his position in his era, and he was one of the most dynamic players in the history of the Dallas Cowboys."

"We wish nothing but the best for DeMarcus and his family, and we appreciate and respect his contributions to the NFL and to our team."

In his Twitter post, Ware thanked "all the people in my life who had a hand in molding me into a great player and the God fearing man I am today. I thank the Dallas Cowboys and Denver Broncos for opportunities to experience what greatness feels like."

Ware retires with 138 1/2 sacks, eighth on the career list.

The Cowboys' all-time sacks leader with 117, Ware joined the Broncos as part of Elway's defensive makeover in 2014 along with safety T.J. Ward and cornerback Aqib Talib.

Von Miller credited Ware with helping him become a superstar and Super Bowl MVP.

Late last season, Miller told The Associated Press: "The type of impact that he had on my life, you could just look at my career those years that he was here. If you look at 2011, 2012 and 2013 and then you look at the years that DeMarcus Ware was here — 2014, 2015, 2016 — and on the field it may not be a big change, but the person that I am and the stuff that I've been exposed to sure was.

"You always want to be a leader. You think you know what it takes and you think you have great ideas, but until you're like three feet away from it and you see like nah, he really doesn't do that or he does this instead of that. And it can just be the little subtle stuff like he comes in and watches film on his phone, it's the little stuff that you observe, that you take," Miller said.

"Like, I don't have to come in every day and make an announcement. I can just come in and do my work and say what needs to be said and get things done. I think I just had to calm down and what calmed me down was really just seeing how it was really supposed to be," Miller said. "I was full speed before, 100 percent. DeMarcus, he's like that, too, though. But just not all the time, you get to see there's a time and a place for everything, and in DeMarcus I got to see a great example of that."

Ware totaled 81 tackles and 21 1/2 sacks in Denver and had a terrific playoff performance two seasons ago with a dozen quarterback hits during the Broncos' run to their Super Bowl 50 title.

Injuries took their toll, however. He missed five games in 2015 with a back injury that first flared up in Dallas, and six games last season with a broken forearm and more back troubles.

Ware received an outpouring of support from players and coaches alike after announcing his retirement.

"D-Ware, a true football legend," Rams defensive coordinator Wade Phillips wrote. "HOF on and off the field."

Memories of Arnie abound at Bay Hill

By Doug Ferguson

PRO GOLF

ORLANDO, Fla. — The photo was never published out of respect for Arnold Palmer.

Palmer was walking his dog early one morning when he turned down Marina Drive across from the Bay Hill Club & Lodge, a tiny lane next to the tennis courts where sunlight filtered through a canopy of trees. He was 85, moving slower than anyone was used to seeing, his shoulders slightly drooped.

What made the picture so poignant was that he looked so real, a man of the people, perhaps Palmer's greatest appeal.

The Bay Hill staff asked the magazine not to use the photo simply because Palmer preferred to be seen in public wearing slacks and a golf shirt (usually pink, always with the Bay Hill umbrella logo), sometimes a sweater. The King was out of uniform.

To look down Marina Drive now is to see the image of Palmer walking his dog, and to be reminded of his presence.

It will not go away anytime soon.

There are sure to be somber moments at the Arnold Palmer Invitational this week. That 13-foot bronze statue of Palmer behind the first tee at Bay Hill was attracting plenty of attention Tuesday. The cart that Palmer used to drive, with two sets of clubs strapped on the back, will be behind the 16th tree starting Wednesday.

Players have put the umbrella on their caps, their shirts or their golf bags for the week. They are taking turns going to his office, sitting behind his desk and signing memorabilia for fans, because that's what Palmer would have done.

Golf Channel, the network Palmer co-founded with Joe Gibbs in 1995, is devoting 50 hours of programming from Bay Hill this week, including live coverage of the opening ceremony on Wednesday.

But it would be a mistake in this week of remembering the King to think of this as the end.

Since his death in September, Arnold Palmer

Enterprises already has renewed corporate deals with MasterCard, equipment maker Textron and Arizona Beverages, which includes the famous Arnold Palmer (half iced tea, half lemonade).

The greater concern is the tournament, and whether it will lose any prestige now that Palmer is gone.

There have been comparisons with the AT&T Byron Nelson outside Dallas, and how it struggled to get a strong field after Nelson died in 2006, in part because the golf course wasn't exactly on anyone's bucket list to play. There's a big difference, though. Nelson had his name on a tournament that moved from Preston Trail to the TPC Four Seasons Las Colinas.

Bay Hill had Palmer's prints from the very start in 1979, long before his name became the title in 2007. He owned the place. He nurtured it. He was everywhere at the club, playing the shootouts with his friends, sipping on his Ketel One in the clubhouse, signing autographs upstairs in his office, and yes, walking his dog down Marina Drive.

Ask any of the players who have lived in Orlando — Tiger Woods, Henrik Stenson, Graeme McDowell — and they will be quick to say their children were born in the Winnie Palmer Hospital for Women & Babies.

Nelson retired from a full schedule in the prime of his career, wanting to secure enough money to buy his ranch. He was a stately figure in the game, and he remained deeply involved in his tournament. Palmer probably stayed in the game too long, and no one cared.

He was 75 when he played the Masters for the last time.

He played Bay Hill for the final time a year earlier, and capped it off by hitting driver off the deck and onto the green at the 18th.

What he left behind are stories, too many to tell, because just about everybody has one. And everyone is smiling when they finish telling them.

Storm forces teams to alter plans

By John Kekis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBANY, N.Y. — Mother Nature is causing college basketball teams to alter their travel plans.

Teams chasing a college basketball title are contending with an unexpected wrinkle that's making last-minute travel plans difficult — a fierce storm bearing down on the Northeast that's expected to dump up to two feet of snow in some places and create blizzard-like conditions.

"We are closely tracking the weather and working with our travel partners and teams in the tournament to ensure the safety of our student-athletes, coaches, administrators, officials and fans," the NCAA said in a statement. "This includes looking at departure times for teams that will play in affected cities."

Villanova, the top overall seed in the men's NCAA tournament, left Philadelphia on Monday afternoon for Buffalo, New York, to get ahead of a storm that's projected to last three days. The defending champion Wildcats, who play on Thursday, had an abbreviated press availability with coach Jay Wright, but no player interviews were granted as the team rushed to its flight.

"I'm not really looking forward to leaving right away, but it hits you with reality, you're in it," Wright said. "We're going to be in Buffalo tonight and we're playing and it's on."

There is less of a chance that the women's tournament would be affected. UConn is the only team in the Northeast hosting and they play Saturday morning giving teams more time to arrive in Connecticut.

U.S. airlines canceled thousands of flights for Monday and Tuesday in anticipation of the storm. Teams in the men's and women's NCAA Tournaments have chartered flights so any travel backlog on commercial planes caused by the storm shouldn't be a problem.

Nobody was facing a more difficult week than Princeton, a school new to the scramble.

The Tigers beat Yale on Sunday for the title in the first Ivy League Tournament, where in previous years they would have clinched earlier by being unbeaten in the regular season.

The victory allowed for a brief celebration and not much more for Chris Mongilia, director of basketball operations for the Tigers.

Los Angeles Times: Anacleto Rapping

Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer chat before a practice round for the U.S. Senior Open in 1998. Palmer, whose annual tournament is on tap this week, died last September at age 87 after a long illness.

The life-and-death stakes of a health law repeal

By Soumya
Karlmanngla

LOS ANGELES TIMES

LANCASTER, Calif. — Nurses and doctors rush through hallways, readying exam rooms. The clinic in Lancaster hasn't yet opened for the day, but staff members know that once patients start filing in they won't stop. In less than two hours, it will be standing-room only in the waiting areas.

Eight years ago, the Antelope Valley Community Clinic was a mobile van that offered check-ups and employed fewer than 10 people. Today it's a health system with two clinics, two vans and 235 employees, and treats 500 patients a day.

"The need was incredible," said clinic CEO James Cook. The privately owned clinic has repeatedly relocated for more space; later this year Cook is planning to move it into a massive building that was once a supermarket. "I guess I didn't know how bad it was."

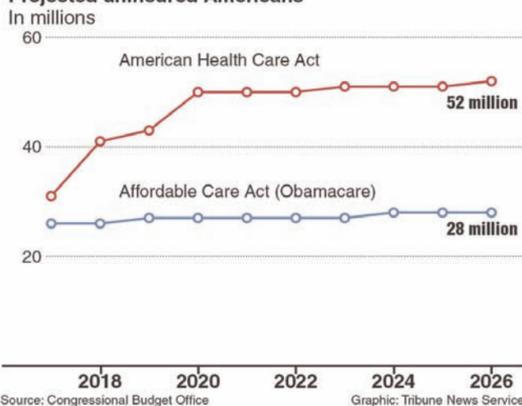

Now Cook and his staff are anxiously watching how President Donald Trump will act on his promise to repeal the Affordable Care Act. The clinic began expanding before Obamacare, but it was the health care law that allowed it to continue growing.

Rolling back of health coverage would likely mean layoffs, fewer services being provided and longer waits for patients, Cook said. It could also halt the progress that's been made in recent years in improving health in the Insurance coverage under the proposed health bill

The Congressional Budget Office, a nonpartisan research agency, released an analysis of the American Health Care Act, the proposed legislation that would repeal and replace Obamacare. According to the analysis, the new bill would lead to more of uninsured Americans.

Projected uninsured Americans

Antelope Valley, which is home to some of Los Angeles County's poorest and sickest residents.

"Those are thousands and thousands of patients who would go back to not having any health care," Cook said. "We'll return to where we were 10 years ago."

The Affordable Care Act allowed hundreds of community clinics like this one, from South L.A. to San Francisco, to offer medical care to some of the sickest Californians. People who usually delayed seeing a doctor or did so only in emergency rooms could visit a clinic for check-ups and even specialty care.

Millions of Californians became newly insured under Obamacare, and many of them are now threatened with losing that coverage.

Maria Hidalgo showed up at the clinic's urgent care center — a very busy corner of the Lancaster office — a few years ago when she ran out of insulin. Hidalgo, a diabetic who has insurance through the low-income government health program Medi-Cal, had moved from L.A. and didn't know where else to go.

The clinic staff assigned Hidalgo to an in-house primary care doctor whom she now regularly sees. On this recent weekday morning, her usual doctor had recommended she meet with the clinic's endocrinologist who specializes in diabetes care.

Hidalgo, 66, is struggling to keep her diabetes under control, and has started to feel tingling in her feet, a complication after two decades with the disease. But she takes insulin doses as prescribed and is adjusting her diet, she told the physician. "Not as many tortillas as I used to eat," she said.

Hidalgo is one of thousands of Medi-Cal patients in the region who probably would have gone without medical care if not for clinics like this one. She would have continued visiting urgent care or emergency rooms when she ran out of insulin. Medi-Cal patients often can't find specialists who take their insurance, so it's even less likely she would have seen an endocrinologist.

Community clinics, which have traditionally served poor Americans, have been able to offer more services as their patients gained insurance through the Affordable Care Act over the past few years. The Antelope Valley Community Clinic has added dentists, dermatologists, cardiologists, podiatrists and therapists to its staff.

"We've literally taken bathrooms and turned them into exam rooms," Cook said.

Demand has also grown as people gaining insurance for the first time seek medical care. L.A. County's 350 community clinic sites treated 23 percent more patients in 2015 than they did in 2010 — serving 1.5 million people each year, according to Louise McCarthy, head of the Community Clinic Association of Los Angeles County.

SpaceX launch postponed due to wind

By Samantha
Masunaga

LOS ANGELES TIMES

SpaceX's planned launch of a commercial communications satellite was delayed by high winds at Cape Canaveral in Florida on Monday night.

The launch had been scheduled for 10:34 p.m. Pacific time from Complex 39A at Kennedy Space Center, where a Falcon 9 rocket is set to lift the EchoStar 23 satellite into space.

SpaceX tweeted at 10:36 p.m. Monday that it was "standing down" on the launch attempt due to high winds and working toward the next available launch opportunity.

That window opens Wednesday night at 10:35 p.m. Pacific time.

In this launch, Hawthorne, Calif.-based SpaceX will not attempt to land its first-stage rocket booster back on the ground or at sea. A combination of the satellite's heavy weight and the high orbit it needs to reach won't leave enough fuel in the booster's tanks to bring it back.

SpaceX Chief Executive Elon Musk said on Twitter two months ago that future flights of such payloads would launch either on the Falcon Heavy rocket, which is set to fly for the first time this summer, or on an upgraded version of the Falcon 9 rocket.

Musk has said the upgraded Falcon 9, which is expected to fly at the end of the year, would have better performance than the current version and could be reused more easily.

This will be the third launch of the year for SpaceX, whose full name is Space Exploration Technologies Corp. Its last mission was about three weeks ago, when it launched supplies for NASA to the International Space Station.

Trump to drop climate change from reviews

By Jennifer A. Dlouhy

BLOOMBERG NEWS

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump is set to sign a sweeping directive to dramatically shrink the role climate change plays in decisions across the government, ranging from appliance standards to pipeline approvals, according to a person familiar with the administration's plan.

The order, which could be signed this week, goes far beyond a targeted assault on Obama-era measures blocking coal leasing and throttling greenhouse gas emissions from power plants that has been discussed for weeks. Some of the changes could happen immediately; others could take years to implement.

It aims to reverse President Barack Obama's broad approach for addressing climate change. One Obama-era policy instructed government agencies to factor climate change into formal environmental reviews, such as that for the Keystone XL pipeline. Trump's order also will order a reconsideration of the government's use of a metric known as the "social cost of carbon" that reflects the potential economic damage from climate change. It was used by the Obama administration to justify a suite of regulations.

Tom Pyle, president of the American Energy Alliance, a conservative, fossil fuel-oriented advocacy group, welcomed Trump's comprehensive approach, calling it essential to undoing Obama-era climate policies that "permeated the entire administration."

"President Obama created such a labyrinth of rules and orders and regulations to cement his agenda across practically every agency," Pyle said in a phone interview. "It was designed to put into the mission of the agencies climate change first and make the rest of their mission second. This was a constraint deliberately set up by the previous administration to make it difficult to utilize coal, oil and natural gas."

Environmentalists said the president's action will erode the international leadership the U.S. has played addressing climate change and encouraging other countries to limit the heat-trapping greenhouse gas emissions that are the primary driver of the phenomenon.

The anticipated action "puts our country, our communities and our people at great risk," said Paul Getsos, national coordinator of the People's Climate Movement, a coalition of labor, civil rights and faith-based groups. "It also sends a dangerous message to the world that the United States does not care about climate change or protecting front-line communities."

Trump's coming order has been discussed by his staff since before he took office. Asked about when the executive order would be issued, White House spokesman Kelly Love said she had "nothing to announce at this time."

It will set in motion some discrete policy changes designed to make coal easier to extract and more enticing to burn.

For instance, the directive will compel the Environmental Protection Agency to undo the Clean Power Plan, an Obama-era rule that forced states to slash the use of coal-fired electricity. Trump also is set to direct Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke to reverse an Obama administration order that blocked the sale of new coal-mining rights on federal lands to producers such as Cloud Peak Energy Inc. and Peabody Energy Corp.

The measure also is set to direct regulators to rescind Obama-era regulations limiting oil industry emissions of methane, a particularly potent — though short-lived — greenhouse gas.

Those changes are designed to help the president fulfill a pledge to "cancel job-killing restrictions" on domestic energy and his repeated promise to put coal miners back to work. Trump's support of coal miners helped propelled him to victory in former Democratic strongholds such as Pennsylvania and West Virginia. But Trump's action is not expected to have an immediate impact on miners, nor do analysts expect it to return coal to its earlier dominance in electricity production.

Even before the Obama administration imposed the coal leasing moratorium in January 2016, coal producers had little interest in adding new federal reserves to their portfolios, amid slumping domestic demand. The U.S. government last sold a coal lease in October 2012, and existing federal leases contain at least 20 years' worth of coal, according to Interior Department estimates.

Resentful reader thinks in-laws 'stole' her baby name

DEAR ANNIE: Ever since I was a young girl, I've known exactly what I want to name my future children. When I played with my Barbies, Barbie and Ken were always renamed "Jane" and "John." (These are pseudonyms.)

Dear Annie
Syndicated Column

Earlier this year, I married the love of my life, "Keith." Though we're in no rush to have children, we do want to have a family eventually. Family is important to both of us and we are lucky to have good relationships with my small nearby family and Keith's family. Keith's eldest brother and sister-in-law are expecting a boy, and they just told us that they are thinking of naming him ... "John."

Though I'm thrilled for them, I am also crushed. Years ago, I mentioned to the soon-to-be parents in passing how I liked the name, and I can't help thinking they "stole" it from me. I'm having a tough time letting go of the resentment, and each time I hear people compliment the name choice, it's like a twist of the knife. What can I do? — WHAT'S IN A NAME?

DEAR WIAN: Get out the book of baby names and start perusing the millions of other choices available to you. I guarantee you'll find one that you like even better. And at the end of the day, there's nothing in a person's name more important than what's in his character.

DEAR ANNIE: This is in regard to "Trapped," who was preparing to leave her abusive husband. "Trapped" should be able to work with an attorney to follow the statutes of the state in which she lives regarding how to serve her husband with a petition for dissolution and perhaps simultaneously get an order for protection.

There should be no need for "Trapped" to meet with her husband face to face. Law enforcement or a process server could personally serve her husband. Of course, "Trapped" will have to make arrangements for an alternative living situation once her husband has been served. — RETIRED ATTORNEY

DEAR RETIRED: Thank you for bringing to attention that important point.
